

Who made my fabric

From 22 to 28 of April it's Fashion Revolution.
A very special week in the fashion and textile world.

Fashion Revolution

The Fashion Revolution movement was born after the collapse of Rana Plaza in Bangladesh in 2013. This dramatic event brought to light certain deplorable working and manufacturing conditions in the textile industry.

This movement encourages all consumers to question and challenge brands to obtain more transparency about the manufacturing of the clothes they buy, and therefore on the textile industry in general.

Dare to challenge the textile industry to change and to understand the traceability and transparency in this sector!

Oeko-tex standards

Since the beginning, Atelier Brunette has been proud to make fabrics in India. With its ancestral textile know-how, this country dear to our heart, is our perfect choice and partner for the manufacture of quality textiles.

We work in direct collaboration with OEKO-TEX certified factories. Whether our products are made in France or India, we maintain close and respectful relationships with the people we work with.

We prefer working with companies on a human scale, who are committed to manufacturing with respect to human beings and the environment.

Instagram Stories

Last year, we revealed our fabric manufacturing processes in India and the different teams with whom we work.

This year, because we have remained faithful to our partners and teams in India, Atelier Brunette continues to work with the same people.

If you missed our Instagram Stories last year, you can find our Stories in our Highlights on our Instagram page.

You can discover our teams and a few behind-the-scenes manufacturing secrets! Since then, we have developed our haberdashery range, which we manufacture in France, in small specialized factories close to our design studio.

100% sales donation

We have implemented small operations to limit waste, such as the reuse (upcycling) of fabric scraps to produce small packing bags for orders. A small action among others that we have imagined for years to come.

To go further today and concretely support the action of Fashion Revolution around the world, Atelier Brunette will donate 10% of sales made from April 22 - 28, 2019.

Throughout the Fashion Revolution week, all orders made on the Atelier Brunette online shop will be delivered for free Metropolitan France without any minimum purchase.

You made your clothes

We are aware of your expectations in terms of transparency and we are ready to answer your questions concerning the manufacture of all Atelier Brunette products.

Do not hesitate to contact us by email at: service-clients@atelierbrunette.com.

Be proud to sew your own clothes! When sewing garments we become conscious about the know-how and the time needed to make a garment. This process may make you wonder about the origin and quality of the fabric.

We love creating our own fashion and taking control over the manufacture of what we wear every day.
